

Why did the banker hide the letter?

I believe that the banker hid the letter so that other people wouldn't see.

I believe that he wanted to keep his image the way it was. He could have burned the letter and been done with it, but instead he locked it away in his fire proof safe. He did this because on the last page, when he got back home he was crying and had such "emotion" (that) kept him for hours from sleeping.

This was part of the lesson that, at the end of his 15 year sentence, the lawyer was trying to teach the banker

Why would someone spend 15 years trying to prove a point? I don't really think that was his intention at first, but after his anger on the 5th year, that changed. 5 years was the normal sentence, yet for some reason he decided that a 15 year sentence would be better. Why did the lawyer choose 15 years instead of 5?

I believe that this decision was in the heat of the discussion.

They were yelling and such.